

G20 to expand debt stops for poorest nations, still arguing over next steps.

The G20 group of major economies is self-assured to expand a multi-billion-dollar debt stop for the world's poorest countries to help them during the pandemic crisis. Finance ministers and central bankers from China, the United States admired China's participation but state further efforts were needed. With the Covid-19 now recovering economies, the World Bank has alerted that 150 million more people could be pushed into uttermost poverty by the end of next year.
