

Wipro CEO is trying to turn around the struggling business

Wipro's new CEO Thierry Delaporte is trying to change the business without the COVID-19 affecting it. Delaporte focused his attention on customers. He conducted meetings over 130 video conferences and is soon going to touch on new multiple contracts with clients in the U.S. and Europe. The company's stock re-formed about 70% since his appointment. Delaporte's predecessor, Abidali Neemuchwala, left after four years and building Wipro a $15 billion company by 2020. The revenue of the company in March was $8.1 billion.
